

Hotel Team Tightens Ties with Hospitality Executives at Cornell Summit

As a strategic partner of Cornell University's Center for Hospitality Research, Schneider Electric was invited to host a session on energy management on October 8th at Cornell University during the Hospitality Research summit.

This premier leadership event gathered c-level executives and academia together to discuss challenges and opportunities within the hospitality industry. The leadership summit allowed Schneider Electric to demonstrate our global expertise and valued input we can provide to this industry.

Paul Hamilton, SVP-Energy Efficiency Programs, urged attendees to think about energy use as a business management process. His presentation focused on the strategy, risks and rewards of strong energy management through best practices and new applications. He also touched on the future of technology, information, and business models that will change the business
